The soft tissue damage will help to diagnose the extent of the damage to the jaw. Also it will help the physiotherapist assess how much the jaw will need to be manipulated during the healing process. The skeletal damage is usually of no consequence to the fighter unless there was any fracture of the facial bones. Even with this minor fracture, a job of the physio is the early mobilisation of the jaw. The teeth damage depends on how the jaw is set during the healing process. Sometimes the teeth may be too loose which can make eating difficult. The fixation of the jaw is what will hold the jaw closed and allow the jaw to heal. This is one of the Occ13bf012
