HyperMotion technology has been introduced as the first new technology in a generation. It's the result of EA Sports continued commitment to evolving the authentic, action-focused gameplay of FIFA. It's amazing to see how more and more games move away from blocking the player, enabling them to run free. This has changed how players tackle and play the ball. Far too often now, players stay still and invite their opponent to run into the space. If we can make the game faster, change the speed of the ball and keep everything that makes FIFA unique then FIFA is going to be the best it can be.

Peter Moore stated, “Technology is a key part of how we can make FIFA the best on the market and also how we want to evolve the game. When you look at FIFA on the move and in its entirety, we couldn’t be more excited about where we are with the game.”

HyperMotion is located in the same location as the FIFA Ultimate Team card system and is designed to make FIFA more authentic and keep the best features that FIFA has to offer intact.

The motion capture system collects biometric data from 22 real-life players whilst playing a complete, high-intensity football match in motion capture suits. On-field data is then integrated into the engine to create a more authentic and advanced gameplay experience. The ground-breaking tech was originally used in the creation of EA SPORTS FIFA 18 and the technology has been enhanced for FIFA 22. HyperMotion technology is the result of EA SPORTS continued commitment to evolution. FIFA 22 features a new scoring system for goals, more match types, goal celebrations and an all-new controller design, as well as a host of key gameplay enhancements. New Score System FIFA 22 introduces a brand-new scoring system that rewards players for playing the ball accurately. Goals and saves earn a point, and saves can also earn a goal kick. Unforced errors – when you give away a free-kick or a penalty – reduce the point and goal kick value.

You can even put the other team further in the lead. Match types FIFA 22 features more flexible match types, with up to three players on the field at once. The more physical game modes – such as Pro Clubs, Amateur Cup and Knockout – have been boosted with more player involvement and more intense play. Each game type can be played in many different ways, meaning that there are many more ways to win
