In order to achieve this, we used the character selector at the top of the text to type in a sample tweet and created it in Mango and applied the appropriate character styles from the list of colors as shown below: Here we have applied the extra styles to the highlighted character, #: From the list of colors below we create a green color filter that we apply to our character: To apply the color filter we will need to convert the color into a hexadecimal color in the format #RRGGBB. To do this we will convert the color color using the following format converter: The color we need is #81E8F4 so we type the above in the text and save it as a file:

We are now ready to apply the color using the following steps: From the Mango we click on the following link: The first option is an advanced colour selector, if we click on that, we can enter the hexadecimal color in the field: Once we have entered the hexadecimal color we click on the Convert button to convert the color to the required format. In the upper right hand corner of the color selector we can see the initial color: If we click on Apply, the color will be applied to the text in the document: Since we have already applied these advanced steps, the rest is simply to copy the text from the Mango and paste it into a blank Microsoft Word document: To create a bulleted list we will use the list style where the bullet should be colored red, to do this we select the text in Mango: From the list of styles on the right hand side we select the Bulleted list. Here we can choose a style, color or both: We now click on the list style: Here we can select the bullet color from the list: We click on the Add bullet button to create the bullet: To add the bullet to the list we simply place the cursor in the list: Clicking on Enter will add the bullet to the list: Here we can see that we have added several bullets to the list: To break the list we type a space followed by the Enter key. This should break the line into different lines: To add a space to the list we need to make sure that the cursor is in the list: We click on the bullet
