The daily consumption of artificially sweetened beverages (ASB) has increased over the last decade. Few studies have examined the effects of chronic ingestion of ASB on the body composition of humans. This study investigated whether, at a typical level of intake, three consecutive days of consumption of ASB (600 kcal) would influence resting energy expenditure (REE) in middle-aged overweight or obese women (n = 27). REE was assessed by indirect calorimetry. There were no significant changes in REE after three days of caffeine ingestion (600 mg/day) in this group. Intake of a caffeine (600 mg) and sucrose solution (600 kcal) for three consecutive days was associated with changes in REE (increased REE) of 15% (P = 0.02) in the two (n = 15) d0c515b9f4
