Amino acid substitution at residue 109 of human KAL-1 is required for N-acetylglucosaminyltransferase III-dependent protein-bound N-acetylglucosamine formation. Human kallikrein-related peptidase-1 (hKLK1) is a serine protease that hydrolyzes polypeptide substrates. hKLK1 also catalyzes

the formation of N-acetylglucosaminyl (GlcNAc) 1,4-glycine ester, a cross-link in the epidermis. The functional domains of hKLLK1 required for N-linked protein glycosylation are not yet fully defined. We studied the enzymatic and glycosylation defects caused by two amino acid substitutions, R109K and E111S, that are conserved among KLLKs. R109K mutation decreased the glycosylation activity of hKLLK1. In contrast les The 'Beatles' of Singapore Original article was published in the newspaper Today in July 2009 "Here are the original four steps that he did with us." This is what reporters from Malaysian tabloids heard from a marketer from the 150-year old market group. It was not the first time and it wouldn't be the last either. And it certainly was just another day for me to go inside the famous 36-storey Maybank Tower where a team of trendy and chic youngsters were going through a difficult assignment: selling cosmetics to low-income earners. After a day at a glittery hair salon, we were taken to three different floors: maids' quarters, maids' get-togethers and ladies' dressing rooms. The first floor was mainly occupied by office workers, while the second and third floors was home to maids from local Chinese homes and other minorities (Muslims, Indians, Kampuchians, Thais,....). I was introduced to Da-nam (the lady of honour), a maid who worked for a senior official at a Ming dynasty palace located on Bedok Road, attending social functions. The marketer took us inside the maids' quarters, where we had to sign the 'refuse' form in order to claim a coupon for lunch. It was closed by that time. Then we headed to the maids' get-togethers. Xiao-jin (the guy who organised the marketing exercise) is the initiator. "So you want to be a sell-out?", "Yes", we replied. "But I am not sure if I can involve you in direct selling." "Of course you can", "It depends, I am a director at a R&B entertainment agency. I will most probably have my own in-house team soon." "Don't worry, all our assistants are really amateurs. We don't have any position of authority or power", "I don't mind. Tell me how." "I am just wondering how you will fit in. We are mainly selling perfumes, face creams, eye palettes, hairstyles and jewelry", "How does a beauty pageant contestant look like?" During the four years since its independence from Malaysia, Singapore has established a reputation as the Beauty Capital of

Q: php 5.2.4: getimagesize() returns false I'm having problems getting php to let me read an image in, despite it showing in the directory where the file is in and I have full read/write permissions on it. I've tried using getimagesize() and imageCreateFromJPG(), but it always returns false. The image it's trying to read is named badfile.jpg. What's really weird is that print_r($_FILES['imgname']) returns the image as full size in the directory and the image is also readable via browser. So the only thing is that when I try to get the contenttype or any of the other return values for image, it always returns false. EDIT: My problem came with the getimagesize() function; any return value other than true will always come back false. I wanted to find out whether the browser cares whether the extension is jpg, so if anyone knows whether this has anything to do with the imageMagick PHP extension, this would also help a lot. A: In PHP 5.3.3, getimagesize() will return false when : The path is a real path, but not on a remote file system An added benefit of this is that you will no longer need to find out the file extension. Here is a bug report from PHP 5.3.3. Q: Pure CSS3 Animation Not Working I've been playing around with some pure CSS3 animations/transforms and have run into a problem. I've created the following html
