"trouble" Appellants also assert that because they got the money they owed after James's death, WMI ceased "trouble" as a matter of law. WMI counters that this dispute cannot be resolved on summary judgment and that the payment to the Contrivers constituted a de minimis benefit to Appellants. WMI argues that the payments were made to the heirs of James, and the heirs were not e79caf774b

Right now I'm using the cfengine.rb library but I don't understand how to force the schedule section to ONLY apply for the first section it hits. I'm using each do block for file parser in the cfengine.rb library. There is some way to check if a file has been processed before applying to the next section of files? I'm wondering if there is some way to check if the current file has already been "go processed" before hitting the next "do" block. #checks if the file being read has been processed and then runs the process again def each do #gets the path to the file path = params[:path] if File.exists?(path) File.readlines(path).each { |line| #prints a line to the console puts "#{params[:path]}:#{line}" if line.include? "package" @package = line.split(/:/)[2] #Store the version number in a hidden file called "package" so that the future use can be scripted by pulling out the file and then replacing the version number by the one in the file. #Then write the new "package" file to the folder #if it doesnt exist just write it #if it doesnt exist just write it #replace the version number in the file with the actual version number #replace the version number in the file with the actual version number if !File.exists?(".\\.\\.packages") File.open(".\\.\\.packages", 'w') do |file| file.write("#{@package}:#{params[:version]}") end else File.open(".\\.\\.packages", 'r') do |file|
