This is a key code used to open G3Â .Q: Rails: both a view and a partial display errors when rendered Rails 3.1.3 When I try to render a view with a partial or vice versa, I get this error. Missing template views/undefined errors/display errors with {:locale=>[:en], :formats=>[:html], :handlers=>[:builder, :erb, :jbuilder, :coffee]}. Searched in: * "app/views" * "home/views" * "home/views" It seems to be part of a larger error, but I just want to get rid of this one! Any help? A: If you're using RJS, check out #rjs_render_views in ActionView::Base. The error message is from ActionView::MissingTemplate. A: Rails 3.1.x has the missing template error coming from ActionView::MissingTemplate. To work around this, you can do one of two things: Define an empty template Missing templates are handy because they're part of ActionView::Base, which is abstracted. Define an empty view that you are using (views/undefined errors/display errors.rjs in this case) and add that view to the render. ActionView::MissingTemplate (Look under ActionView::MissingTemplate). This is covered on StackOverflow with the following question: Rails 3: ActionView::MissingTemplate when rendering partial over on this website: Rails 3.1.3 - ActionView::MissingTemplate: Missing template Rails 3.2.0 This issue was closed: 'Missing template messages/display_errors with {:locale=>[:en], :formats=>[:html], :handlers=>[:builder, :erb, :jbuilder, :coffee]}. Searched in: * "app/views" * "home/views" * "home/views". This issue was moved from application to actionview, so there is no need for a migration or anything. In my application code I created a defaults/display errors.rjs
