Q: Swift 2.0: UIScrollView can't be deallocated while using memory warning If I use a UIScrollView in one of my iPhone Apps, then the app crashes if it receives a memory warning after a while. Is this behavior intended and is this something that I need to consider when using a UIScrollView? Here is the crash log:  Terminating app due to uncaught exception 'NSInvalidArgumentException', reason: ' -[__NSCFConstantString dealloc] sending nil while unbalanced nil/non-nil-weak argument count' A: Yes this is perfectly expected behavior. The problem is that when a NSError is returned by NSString's stringByReplacingOccurrencesOfString(_:withString:,:), it is impossible to tell whether it indicates a fatal error (i.e., a serious error that will cause the entire app to crash) or merely an error that can be handled in some way. Thus, a constant string used as a key in UserDefaults will return an error in every single state of your app, and you can't know whether the constant string is actually a valid key until you try to access the UserDefaults and it throws an error. I've seen this crash a few times. Its usually caused by a bad string by a developer who doesn't realize that it will return a fatal error. From Apple's doc on UserDefaults: Class methods + (id)stringForKey:(NSString *)key + (id)dataForKey:(NSString *)key These methods make it possible for you to access your preferences data—the preferences manager stores the results of those calls under a default key, kUserDefaultsDefaultSavedPreferencesKey, and you can read and update the preferences programmatically by calling these methods. A: The problem is NSString stringByReplacingOccurrencesOfString:withString: returns nil when given a nil receiver. The NSString class provides a method that searches for strings and replaces them with other strings. This method can be called to replace a string in a string and also replace the string in a range of a string. From Apple's documentation: stringByReplacingOccurrencesOfString:withString: If both parameter are nil, this

Cambodia's prime minister has unveiled an $800,000 Hockney-inspired sculpture of a human face that is now on display at a post office in Phnom Penh. Samdech Hun Sen announced the Hockney homage on Friday, the anniversary of the birth of the British painter David Hockney. The minister's sculpted sculpture of a great-looking Cambodian leader in a striped polo top and a matching cap has been put on public display at the opening of a new post office in Phnom Penh. Hun Sen told a crowd of people watching the unveiling of the sculpture that it was modelled after his head. He also said the work of the renowned British artist was chosen for its "beauty and quality". "I'm actually pleased to see that Mr David Hockney liked my work," said the prime minister. "I didn't know it at the time, but he said that the sculpture is my head and that I look exactly like it. I feel very honoured to be compared with him," Hun Sen said in front of journalists after the unveiling ceremony. Virok Yeam who organised the sculpture said that Hun Sen, who is known to enjoy painting, made the sculpture by himself. The prime minister added that he decided to give his personal work to the public as “I feel that my youth still has a lot of life in it”. The sculpture has been put on show in the same building that houses Hun Sen’s cabinet office. The artist’s wife, artist and photographer Lucy Hockney, also lives in the area and was present for the unveiling. Hun Sen and Hockney are both known for their commitment to giving a voice to ordinary people through painting and photography. Both the prime minister and the painter have also received criticism from opposition and rights groups for their heavy-handed leadership style, including creating a murky political situation. Hockney was given a rare, official position and was appointed a member of the Cambodian royal court. He was later arrested and accused of a series of “crimes”, including photographing officials at a royal ceremony, despite having the correct permits. The artist was ultimately deported to the UK, though his family continued to live in Cambodia until this year. The sculptures marking
