While it's nice to have a fresh start with the New Year, it's also the perfect time to reflect on the past, celebrate some of your favorite foods and think about whatâ€™s ahead. Here are a few reasons why it's time to throw out the pasta machine: Sector-specific incentives, such as a percentage increase in the list price of a home for every $1,000 of tax credits earned, are designed to keep potential buyers in that region. In the case of Texas, that means promoting the regionâ€™s size and proximity to Houston, from which would-be homebuyers can easily access jobs and employment opportunities. (CNN) -- It's a problem that has plagued consumers for years, and it's one that concerns all homeowners when winter temperatures begin to rise. There are no magic formulas for keeping water out of your home and ensuring that it doesn't get soaked as temperatures rise. That's because water is considered a "free" resource for most homeowners, and thus one that can easily be used as a source of water, whether for cooking or watering indoor plants. In fact, the U.S. Department of Energy estimates that between 40 and 60 percent of a home's annual water use is a result of "low-use" activities such as watering indoor plants, showering, and making coffee. And while demand for water increases during the heat of summer, the cost of water usually doesn't rise. It's only when temperatures fall that water begins to cost more. So what do homeowners need to know about water use and water conservation? "The money you spend on water is money you don't spend on something else," said Rick Van Sickle, owner of Buffalo Watermark.
