On the use of a kinetic theory in the theory of formation of an equilibrium solid-liquid interface of a He-fluid. An asymptotic kinetic theory of a He-fluid is developed and the theory of transition from an initial state of a film free of impurity atoms to the macroscopic equilibrium formed by the film is built on the basis of the kinetic theory. The theory is applied to the study of the dependence of the equilibrium film thickness on the film thickness at the initial state. The influence of the initial film thickness on the equilibrium film thickness is small as long as the film thickness in the initial state is not much smaller than 10^{-7} cm. From the comparison with the experiment the following agreement is found: a cross-over of the solid-liquid interface with a transition from the diffuse to the step-wise regime occurs near 110 K.

(She's my Grandma too if I want to get real complicated.)

For the last year, my mom has been writing a book on how to manage your life, and it just got released last week. I downloaded it and listened to it while I wrote, and I was really impressed. My mom is very wise and inspiring, and I think you will find it helpful. I've actually used a couple of her tips in my own life, and I thought they'd be useful for others. This book covers: 1) How to communicate better with your parents. This is a major one for me. This is also why, in the first book, I had my mom's mom and my dad's sister write separate chapters about why it's important for us to communicate well with our parents. 2) How to handle stress better. My mom spent 10 years in the army and has a lot of stories that illustrate points about how to handle
