The technology allows players to increase the speed and intensity of their game, with the option of using a turbo boost to accelerate time. As a player gets back to the ground, he will then slow down naturally to take control of the match. During this time, the movement of the player will be “whipped” at a higher speed due to the player’s unnatural weighting on the artificial surface. With the movement and acceleration of the player having been sped up, a player will also make quick movements such as tackling, turning and heading the ball – all of which can have enhanced visual clarity. Gameplay and Physical Intelligence The technology will also enable players to increase their stamina as they face more sprints, tackles and challenges. But it also introduces new attributes to the game. High Impact players will have the ability to change their weighting, meaning they can become heavier on their back foot in one moment, to become lighter on their front foot in the next. This will allow for more intelligent positioning in the play, which will in turn add an element of unpredictability to the game. The technology will allow players to become proactive in combat situations by having a higher combat intelligence. Players will be able to detect opponents quickly, and exploit them before they detect them. For instance, if a player is in possession of the ball, he will be able to decide whether to duck under a challenge or keep his head up – and react to threats, with an intelligent way of changing his positioning. This is something that players would expect at the highest level of the game. For example, if a player is tracking a ball-carrier and then sees a header coming, he will not just play the pass but will also turn and challenge the header. Reaction and Decision Making AI will also have the ability to improve decision making, spotting patterns of play and reacting to such aspects in the game. For example, an AI could spot a specific move or a set piece in the game and react to it. With the technology, players will have a much higher level of awareness and an increased ability to read the game at all times. Many of the gameplay elements will rely on the technology being used correctly, such as calculating angles or making passes to off-balance players. Visual enhancements The new “HyperMotion” technology will also bring more realism to the presentation. With the support for up to 512 players

FIFA 22 builds on this legacy and for the first time, players have a deeper understanding of how each pitch will react when under pressure, including unpredictable how the ball will behave. This change to FIFA's physics is felt in all areas of the game, meaning that when you touch the ball, it's harder to knock it away, harder to dribble it, harder to control it, harder to shoot, and more consistent when you shoot. The new player collision is designed to further bring the ball to life, with players more able to shield the ball, move it back to their feet, and escape danger.
- New contextual animations When you control the ball, you now have a larger range of options: Flip, shoot, pass, dribble, fake, head the ball, and run. The goal is to continue to expand these options in FIFA 22.
