NeuT, a transcription factor composed of five zinc fingers, is specifically expressed in neuroendocrine cells and mediates regulation of hormone and neurotransmitter genes. Sp1 binding sites have been identified in the 5'-flanking region of NeuT. In this study, we transfected the full length 5'-flanking region of NeuT gene and its truncated fragments into P19CL6 cells and found that the Sp1 binding sites are sufficient to drive transcription of a reporter gene. Electrophoretic mobility shift assay revealed that Sp1 binds to its binding sites in a cell-specific fashion. Furthermore, we found that expression of Sp1 in P19CL6 cells greatly decreases NeuT promoter activity. These results indicate that Sp1 regulates the expression of NeuT gene. 458 So.2d 283 (1984) Albert CONWAY, Appellant, v. STATE of Florida, Appellee. No. 83-1376.
