Guadalupe's work is in many ways derived from what she refers to as the Latin-American Spiritual Revaluation, which stems from her process of formation and self-discovery that led her to a nontraditional philosophy that is both mystical and scientific. Early Life and Education In 1986, when María was 23, she got a driving license. Her first steps as an independent artist, began when she opened her own art gallery in El Pedregal in Mexico. After she left this gallery, she went to her hometown, Guadalajara, in order to study the history of art, architecture, religion, philosophy, and anthropology. María studied photography for a period of time and felt that her artistic approach would be transformed into art, because she considered it the best medium to express her concepts.
