bluebeam's new functions for revu 11 include: new markup list function allows you to manage projects using a star system. the project manager now allows for the list of filenames to be organized and displayed with a star system. this includes assigning a star rating for each file. navigation is now much more intuitive: the ability to navigate the entire project via the navigation bar at the top of the project page, or via the project timeline. navigation controls are now available from the project menu and allow for easy bookmarking of any screen. projects are now easier to work with as they are imported or exported in an xml file. file-based comments can now be exported into a word document. revu can now export a backup copy of all markup lists. as with the previous major version, revu will continue to support the previous user interface and user marking templates. as a result of this progress, users (at least) will need to re-retain their version of the previous revu. previously, users could create a draft for review by other users or project team members. while this is still an option, the current revu allows for much more control over the sharing and handing of the review. reviewers can be assigned to projects and the reviewer's marks on a project page determine the score. unlike revu, where users either use the project line or the score chart to submit marks, the review process in the new version of revu allows for the marks to be gathered in an excel spreadsheet that can be exported with a click. this will be even better in the future when users can work with their own spreadsheet to control the data and even generate custom reports.
