Not so with McMaster-Carr. Its just a matter of pressing place your order button. A drop-down box appears asking you to select your purchase order, and other boxes appear asking you to select your shipping address, your payment option, and your desired delivery date. Press the next page button, and youre off to the races. Before long, youll get a confirmation email. Then several minutes later, another email comes with your purchase order. Press a button, and you get your shipping information. In the end, McMaster-Carr is a big player in the small part world. In their various divisions, they sell over 1.2 million of these components every year, and likely do more business than any other manufacturer in the entire automotive aftermarket. One could always use more competition, of course, but McMaster-Carr has definitely earned its place on the Top 10. It may not be the cheapest, but theyre definitely the ones to beat. In addition to CAD models, McMaster-Carr also has excellent spreadsheets. Not only can you see if a part would fit, but you can also see pricing. While it might be tempting to use their catalog to shop for a part, the value in doing so is limited. I mean, you cant get the kind of feel for the company that you can from inspecting the shipment itself. If there were ever a time that CAD models and spreadsheets werent going to do, its probably now. However, using spreadsheets and CAD models for research is an excellent way to make sure that a part will work as expected. Consider the super high-end (but still doable) microcontroller you want. By clicking into the spreadsheet, you can find out if they have a schematic (or at least a PCB layout). This lets you determine if the schematic is functional, or whether youll have to acquire a PCB from someone else. Another thing I like about McMaster-Carr that I dont see anywhere else is that they automatically package parts for shipment. (Props to McMaster Carr for this.) The checklist is the same as the one youll get from the local hardware store . You dont even need to go to their web site. Whipped up in an Excel file, theyve got the exact same checklist youll get from any PC hardware store. You can copy the entire spreadsheet and order for parts before you leave the house. Try this:

And that is what makes McMaster-Carr systems such a godsend for those of us with project deadlines. First, there's the cost savings of setting up an account and ordering parts. It isn't free, and it's not cheap, but it isn't free. It's something like md5.com or buy-cifte.org, that you know you won't use but you're willing to spend a small sum each month to get good service. I make the analogy to the difference between a McDonald's value meal and a $20 footlong from Subway. McDonald's value meal is over-priced, but it's the best value. It's the same with McMaster-Carr. It's not a perfect analogy, but it gets the point across. The small monthly fee does not cover the shipping cost, but it is still a huge factor in the cost savings for McMaster-Carr. The cost savings are in the part prices alone and certainly not available to everyone. To sum up, McMaster-Carr is a good source for random, rarely used, and hard to find parts. If you know what part you want, their website is very helpful in finding it. A lot of homebuilders use them as part of their research process. McMaster-Carr is one of the first vendors that I see before I even start shopping, and it's one of the better vendors out there. Some of their pricing is a bit high, but their return policy is a game changer. I don't have to deal with "Sorry, we only have 20 left. Next morning, a week later, we have 5 left." It's a simple outback 16-way threaded, PTFE-coated, slip-in, 5/8" x 1.00" threading. Usually these parts are sold by the OEMs like Hitachi and as individual pieces online. You can get these for next to nothing from McMaster-Carr. If they don't have it, they can find it. McMaster-Carr is a valuable addition to your toolkit. 5ec8ef588b
