Iddaa alt ust excel.So let's get to the important stuff. The most important thing to note is that we've received multiple time frames for the newsletter. I'm sure you can imagine, public relations and content marketing is not cheap, afterall, so they've been hard at work getting us a cheap but good tim frame. Once the embargo passes, we'll make a big announcement. Things will start going fast and the site will start to return to normal. We will keep you posted as we move through this timeline. It has been rough... but you guys really pull together, and the resolve shows. Keep it up Also did a lot of research, the larger the company the more documents they get rid of. Also the bigger the company the less likely a purchase of the company. Still I am interested and keep my eye on it. I will not sleep tonight because of news like this. Geez in all of this time and all the client projects we have worked on and managed, you've never heard me call out to you about starting to charge for your work? Especially for this level of work? I'm not in the market for professional services, and I have no desire to get into the financial services industry. So that's the reason why. No - I'm not being sarcastic or derogatory. This is all true. I've been happily self-employed for several years now, and it has been wonderful. I don't get to ride in a limo, and I've never had a "presidential suite". But it was all worth it. I stopped charging clients for my professional services sometime in 2011. There's just a few handful of clients I have, who I've worked for over 10 years, and with whom I'm so close and spend so much time with, that I have no desire to alienate myself from these clients. I feel a lot of that pain around. I've lost two clients to the very last day of 2011. And I won't forget this... ever. If I've been avoiding charging clients for services, I'm really bad at it. But I've been avoiding charging because it is uncomfortable to me. I remember in my head, it being a rejection, when it's really an adjustment. It's being uncomfortable with me charging my clients, because I'm uncomfortable with myself, in that sense. I just started pricing things, and without the clients - it's really feeling like a rejection. I'm not sure what I'm afraid of. I've done some of it on my own. We sold a house this year for a price that was lower than I thought it should have been. With every transaction I've done - my objective has been that the client gets the most they can. Without "asking" clients to pay more, the reality is, that if we take care of ourselves, we can be more giving. We don't have to worry so much about "making money." If we take care of ourselves, we can be so much more giving. 5ec8ef588b
