the main purpose of speaker calibration is to ensure that a specific metered audio level in your daw or on your mixer equals a predetermined spl in your studio environment. depending upon the method and reference levels used during calibration, proper calibration can help reduce unwanted noise, minimize the risk of damage to your studio monitors and to your ears, maximize the reference capabilities of different speaker types, and ensure you hear the audio as accurately as possible. feel the explosive action from 240 watts peak (120 watts rms) power feeding the down-firing subwoofer and two satellite speakers with lightweight, high-strength metallic drivers. hear every detail as game and sound designers intended from this 2.1 speaker system and from a wide range of angles, thanks to the unique driver design delivering a huge soundscape. if the right-hand speaker is placed too close to the wall, you will start to hear that characteristic “tinny” sound with a lot of crosstalk. move the speaker to a safe distance of 20-40 inches from the wall, and you will start to hear the true sound of the speaker, with more apparent detail. the only way to get your speakers to sound their best is to give them a good stand and a good place to play. high impedance means that the speakers have very little resistance to the current flowing into them. this makes your subwoofer’s and satellite speakers’ power ratings look very high when compared with low-impedance speakers. don’t take this for granted, though. the “bigger” the speakers are, the less they will actually draw current from the amplifier.
