In manufacturing of a semiconductor device, a process of manufacturing and inspecting a semiconductor wafer, which is a substrate to be treated, is performed in multiple lots by a processing apparatus (e.g., a plasma processing apparatus) which processes a semiconductor wafer in multiple lots. In the processing apparatus, a number of semiconductor wafers are disposed in a single wafer cassette. Each of the semiconductor wafers in the wafer cassette is arranged to be sequentially processed. Generally, in the processing apparatus, processing conditions of the semiconductor wafers in the wafer cassette are not changed even if the semiconductor wafers in the wafer cassette are transferred to another processing apparatus. However, in a case where the processing conditions of the semiconductor wafers in the wafer cassette vary according to a lot, when the wafer cassette is transferred between a plurality of processing apparatuses, the processing apparatus cannot perform stable processing on the wafer cassette. As a technology for reducing the variation of the processing conditions in the processing apparatus, there has been proposed a method which determines that the processing apparatus operates stably when it is found that a processing recipe is appropriate for a lot of processed semiconductor wafers (see, e.g., Japanese Patent Application Laid-open No. H10-108137). For example, in a case where a conventional wafer cassette includes a large number of semiconductor wafers, it is difficult to find out all semiconductor wafers from which a processing recipe suitable for each lot can be obtained. Thus, there is a problem that a lot which is not processed or a lot having a small number of semiconductor wafers is processed. `ger?3745` `Whatis` `thefifthrotof314166633` `tothenearestinteger?37` `Whatis`

What's New in the?

A new study by the Frank Sloop Foundation for Alzheimer's found that genes that increase the risk of developing Alzheimer's disease could be discovered in both patients and people who show signs of Alzheimer's. It's the first study to show that people who are genetically at risk of developing Alzheimer's are actually predisposed to developing the disease. It also found that these genes identify people with Alzheimer's who have a "trigenerational" risk, meaning that having a parent with Alzheimer's is a factor in the risk of developing the disease as well. People identified as having a "two-generation" risk are those who have one parent with Alzheimer's and one who is not yet showing signs of the disease. The genetic risk factors found have not yet been linked to any specific Alzheimer's treatments. Read more Getting a score on the Alzheimer's Risk Test is not a license to call yourself a 'senior.' A screening test is not a diagnosis. A diagnosis comes from a doctor with knowledge of your medical history. The Alzheimer's Risk Test is a convenient, inexpensive way to discover if you have a genetic predisposition to develop Alzheimer's disease. Read more Data suggests that the risk of developing Alzheimer's disease is higher in African-Americans. According to the Alzheimer's Association, almost all African-Americans have two copies of the apolipoprotein E ε4 allele, or APOE4, the most important genetic risk factor. This risks people who have African-American heritage, to the tune of 65 percent, to develop Alzheimer's disease. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention now reports that African-Americans make up 13 percent of the population of the United States, compared to about 7 percent of the population of Canada, which has the highest Alzheimer's incidence rate in the world (40 cases per 100,000 people). The CDC projects that by the year 2040, the African-American population will likely make up 14 percent of the U.S. population. Read more The National Institute on Aging \(NIA\) recently released its new recommendations on stroke prevention. The new recommendations recommend that people use a combination of blood pressure control, medications and cholesterol lowering to reduce their risk of stroke. The new recommendations also specify the use of omega-3 fatty acids to prevent the progression of existing cognitive problems associated with brain aging and stroke.
