

its about two weeks ago, i was watching this documentary on youtube. i just watched the whole thing and it was the first full length documentary about apartheid (south africa). it is very difficult to watch this documentary for more than 2 hours especially i was weeping so much (almost crying) before and at the end of the documentary. it is my first time to watch so much documentaries at one time on youtube. i watched a documentary on a familiar topic that i'm very interested in at the same time, then, i watched a documentary about a very unfamiliar topic that i'm very interested in at the same time. so, i knew for sure that it will help me to move forward on doing my diploma but the other issue is the amount of reading up that i have to do. oh! i will be having a hell of a tough time reading all the documents and thesis work on my own. when that day comes, i will need to drop everything i'm doing and go back to my studies. it will not be an easy task. i could feel the stress and tension slowly building up inside of me. all the reading material that i have will burn a hole inside my eyes. will i have time to cope with it all? i will be very exhausted. i'm getting overwhelmed now. what was i telling you before about final cut pro x getting easier to use. well, i was wrong, it was getting harder not easier. the clean install of the final cut pro x to a new ssd was a gigantic step backwards. i kid you not i even had to use some finder action like using the magic wand to click on the cs6 folder icons to drag them to my trash bin. it took me three hours to cut my first time trial movie, i couldnt get the file, i couldnt stop the clip, i couldnt go in the i cant get into options menu (there was nothing in the menu), i couldnt quit the window, i couldnt undo it, i couldnt save it, i cant quit, i cant save it either or i cant quit. i am disheartened and disgusted. i dont even know what to do. i had a whole suite of mac os cs6 tools, and now i have nothing, then in comes adobe premiere pro 2019 which is obviously a less user friendly version. i spent three hours trying to add a one-minute audio clip to my movie. i tried several times to clip the audio file to the timeline and i cant get it to work. i thought i would have learned my lesson. i was wrong!

i was lucky enough to still have the same machine at the end of the decade and later still, i still use it. i imported photoshop and illustrator and some cartoons into that new computer with cracking activations and adobe cs elements, and in the early days i toiled away on the design and art of dream castle, zipping around the corporate world as an it manager and x-box add-on sales manager (humble!) and still, i kept slaving over the old adobe suite, just waiting for the new computer to come along with a shiny new licence full of activation codes. i'm still waiting, and its just about time for me to use the old one again. i'm even using it at work (with a clean install of photoshop) just to pass the time between calls to upload files to my distant ftp server. i loved the old adobe suite and it's where i began my venture into the world of video editing, but i felt like i had come home when i became a partner with adobe at work and finally became a creative cloud subscriber. until this month that is. now to adobe, i own a platinum creative cloud subscription, and to adobe premiere pro cc 2018 12.0.1.69 activation crack. i own all the animations, cross-media app and smart brushes i need to complete this project. i own the environment and the time for editing that i've been training for since i came to the company six years ago. but, oh no, they've pulled the plug on cs6. they've pulled the plug on flash. they've pulled the plug on desktop publishing and the extra features of illustrator and indesign that make you seriously think about a professional career in graphic design. they've pulled the plug on the windows operating system that enables you to open your files up to other professionals like me. they've pulled the plug on an environment that lets us do what we're really interested in. 5ec8ef588b
